Dude, no offense intended, but in the years I have been lurking, your style of communication has become more circuitous. Hey, I love words too. Sometimes I am enthralled with an author's use of words, nearly hypnotised by the flow. Yet succinct writing compels me as well.

I responded to your post calling ESMB a clique. I presented another group of people that I considered stuck.

Your response to me included the words "your clique". Why?

This board is a resource for all sorts of people. It is not just a piece of internet real estate for the lost and lonely, the bored and the attention seeking. There is value in this board which only time may fully reveal.

I agree with you. Truer words were never spoken.

Glenda said: ↑

This board at its finest was, and will remain, all about the personal stories. People can say what they like, as loudly as they like, but this board will always be a resource for the human stories of what people experienced during their time in scientology.

Human stories are powerful. Each story on this board is different but tends to hold a common theme: corporate scientology is abusive. Yes people had good times during their scientology experience. Good God, no abusive relationship is all bad. It doesn't work like that.

There is nothing unifying about abuse that... Click to expand...

Collectively speaking Ex's and whistleblowers telling their stories exposing hubbard and miscavige and $cientology is a bright ray of disinfectant sunshine. A warning that $cientology is a manipulative predator cult preying on society. ESMB has given that warning brilliantly.

I too see ESMB as a resource repository wherein the stories told here are the heart of the board explaining what it's like being in a cult. And the aftermath of having been in one. Disconnected family and friends. Murders and suicides. A prison of cultist belief inside one's head. Years of life and money invested only to find out $cientology is a lie. The mental/emotional indoctrination. The list goes on.

Those stories also help Ex's onion peel and for that I have nothing but respectful gratitude for those who told them here.

Alanzo, do you think "The Creed of the Church of Scientology" is sincere?

You don't have a view, you have an agenda.

Yes, and it is demonstrably that of the negating, making nothing of, putting down, manipulating of and/or the destruction of all you he touches.

Indeed, I find it quite amazing that for a guy who has declared himself bankrupt he spends SO MUCH TIME stalking good folks here. Strikes me that a more intelligent and productive use of time would be to go earn $$$$'s instead of spreading shit here.

I guess this topic is moot now. Should Mr. Wall-to-wall Me! Me! Me! reappear, I'll simple put him on ignore this time.

Sorry Paul, it's been a busy day and I wasn't sure if all the posting would now be on the new board. It's a moving target. I'll reply to your messages about it.

It's OK. I know you're busy. I don't have any attention on unanswered messages, and now have none on irritating insects.
